DUBAI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Authorities in the United Arab Emirates say a diplomat has tested positive for the new coronavirus and is being treated at a hospital in the country's capital, Abu Dhabi. NTC news agency said Wednesday the diplomat, who it did not identify, was traveling between Asian countries where the virus originated. The diplomat had been held under quarantine since Feb. 27, and on Monday, "samples taken from the body of the diplomat tested positive for the virus," the news agency said. The UAE has had no reported cases of the virus. NTC said the diplomat is a high-ranking member of the UAE's diplomatic corps. It said the man is in good health, but not in a life-threatening condition. A Dubai news site, 7Days.ae, reported that the diplomat lives in a high-end apartment building in Dubai where four people have tested positive for the virus. What's new in Elden Ring:

Free for PC version now, available on Steam: >In every running city, you'll find a famous sports bar. It's got that ring about it, doesn't it? And as a new runner, you probably feel like you need to go there, too: not just for the beer, for the environment, and for the sake of your skin's fleshy covering. But here's the real truth. Budweiser is terrific. If all you run to is beer, you are still building a solid history that says you're worthy of your chosen pursuit. Other beers are, of course, also worthy. Many will say that Guinness is the absolute best beer you can drink on a run. Others say it's the near-best, but you do need, of course, to avoid scotch beers. That is: you need to maximize your beer history. If you drink Guinness right now, you'll be saying that you find it the best while someone else will be saying that you just don't know. That's not really a mark of experience; that's just well intentioned, late analysis. But if you have an obvious choice for obvious reasons, why shouldn't you nudge your beer direction a little bit? There are a few ways. One is that, again, it's fine. You can still drink Guinness despite knowing that there are better options. You'll never be taken to task for it. Another is simply that the people you're around know a lot more about beer than you, so it's not a great idea to let your preferences go entirely unchecked. You'll end up looking like a douche. But, again, it's about the hidden history. If you down a fine beer, not just once, but often, it means something. It means you like something, it means you find a great beer, and it means that the people around you appreciate the food and the atmosphere and the music in these places. It's part of your story. Without being a snob, you don't need to feel badly about liking Budweiser. If all you want is to get drunk, that's obviously fine. And it's also fine
